Course No : GR-409

Course Title : Theories of Literature II

Course Credits: 4

Course Level : A

Course In-Charge: Rajendra Dengle

Course Contents:

This course is basically a continuation of GR-401, which involved a discussion of Positivism and Hermeneutik. This semester students will engage with the theoretical positions of Marxism, Formalism-Structuralism in detail. The group will also be introduced to the later developments in literary theory such as Post-Structuralism, Deconstruction, and Post-Colonial Theory, which will be dealt with in greater detail in the following two semesters.

Sessional Evaluation: TWO Written Sessional Tests (40% each) and Active Participation, Home Assignments (20%)

End-Semester Examination: NONE

Course No.: GR 410

Course Title: Theory and Methodology of Translation

Course Credits: 4

Course Level: A

Course-in-Charge: Chitra Harshvardhan

Course Contents:

The ‘Skopustheorie’, a functionalist approach to translation, is sought to be relativised by juxtaposing it with other approaches to translation, such as the hermeneutic and descriptive approaches. The course seeks to generate reflection on the activity and significance of translation and hence on the implication of the choice of a particular translational strategy over another. The course also attempts to provide insights into relationships of hegemony and power between cultures as reflected in translation. It critically examines the activity of translation in facilitating access to other cultures.

The following aspects shall be dealt with:

- Analysis of the nature and interpretation of texts
- The issue of translatability
- F.Schleiermacher: Über die verschiedenen Methoden des Übersetzens
- Walter Benjamin: Die Aufgabe des Übersetzers
- Descriptive Translation Studies (Translation Studies as a discipline, polysystem theory, concept of manipulation)
- Gender and translation
- Globalization and translation
- Postcolonial issues in translation
- Issues of cultural identity and translation
- Criticism of literature in translation
- Translators’ Notes, Prefaces and Epilogues.

Evaluation: 1 ST (20%) + AP (5%) + book presentation (15%) + presentation and analysis of recent articles from translation Journals (10%)

End-Semester Exam.: Written (50%)

End Semester Examination: None

Course No.: GR-412
Course Title: Specialized Translation - II
Course Credits: 4
Course In-charge: Priyada Padhye

This course deals with translation for specific purposes. It will deal with building on the existing language skills, researching and developing vocabulary on a specialized subject, translating longer and more demanding texts to produce commercially usable translations.

The course will centre around a specific field. The students will be initiated into the field by arranging a lecture by an expert of the field. Subject specific concepts will be clarified through the lecture and background reading will be suggested. The students will have to do the research independently for the class room assignments. The research required for acquiring subject specific background reading as well as knowledge on text types will have to be done by the students themselves. Patent specifications will form the core of the text types dealt with in the course. Material for class assignments will be authentic texts didactized for the purpose of class room teaching.

Evaluation

Two sessional tests [20 % each]	40%
CCE: Active class participation, home assignments	10%
End semester examination:	50%

Course Title: Germany and the European Union; Lecture Series: The Idea of Europe

Course Credits: 4

Course Level: A

Course In-Charge: Babu Thaliath

Course Contents:

The Landeskunde course GR - 413 will be held in the form of a lecture series on "The idea of Europe". It will focus on the genesis of the idea of Europe as unfolded in various – cultural, historical, linguistic, social, philosophical as well as religious-political – facets. The lectures will relate to the history and culture of Europe from the Middle Ages to the Present, which also includes the emergence of the European Union and Germany's participation in it as well as the current refugee crisis in Europe. Each lecture will be supplemented by discussions on concrete texts.

Course Evaluation: 1. Term Paper (50%), 2. Class Room Presentation (Referat) - on a topic other than that of the term paper - (30%), 3. Active Participation (20%)

End-Semester Exam. None

Course Title: Poetics of Genre

Course Number: GR 415

Course Credits: 4

Course –In- Charge: Mercy Vungthianmuang Guite

Course Contents: Part 1: The course will introduce students to a theoretical understanding of Genre and the poetics of Genre. By reading the extracts of certain theoretical texts, it will enable the students to understand the genesis and the evolution of genre and also try to problematise the complex relationship of various genres in Literature with each other.

1. Aristotle's Poetics
2. Reception of Greek poetics in German literature in the 17th and 18th century:
 - i. Lessing's Hamburgische Dramaturgie and Bürgerliches Trauerspiel
3. Problematising Genre- Schlegel's Progressive Universal Poesie:
Response of the 19th century German literature to Renaissance and Enlightenment.
4. Georg Friedrich Wilhelm Hegel-Aesthetics (1835-1838)- The shifting emphasis (Prose)

Part 2: Theoretical concepts will be explained through an analysis of exemplary texts. The course will refresh the knowledge of the history of German literature and trace the evolution of one literary Genre in this historical framework.

The course will also deal with one Genre intensively from the 18th to the 20th/21st century with exemplary narrative texts. This shall enable the students to critically analyse 'literary genres' and also discuss the evolution of the particular genre through the different time-periods.

Course Evaluation:

Course Title : Consecutive Interpretation

Course Credits : 4

Course Level : A

Course-in-Charge : Chitra Harshvardhan

Course Contents :

The course seeks to consolidate the skills of comprehension, retention and reproduction introduced in the previous semester. The focus will remain on building competence for reproducing the speech in all its details and nuances.

There will be an intensive use of the technique of note taking introduced in the previous semester. Students will be required to strike a balance between retention and note-taking. Therefore, the course will enhance their ability to customize a personalised set of note-taking skills suited to individual capability.

The course will continue to consolidate skills for the acquisition of background information, essential for the comprehension and competent rendering of a speech into the target language. The course will also continue to build on requisite interpretation etiquette.

Students will be required to read independently on issues being dealt with in the course in both the languages and familiarize themselves with the field and terminology. They are also expected to keep abreast of current affairs through reading newspapers and magazines in German and English as well as articles in academic journals, both print and online.

Students will be expected to present short speeches in English based on articles read by them, making use of the note taking skills acquired. The rest of the students would be expected to interpret these brief speeches into German.

Interpretation will initially be from German into English, and eventually from English into German once students display sufficient proficiency in interpreting texts accurately from German to English. Authentic speeches from the internet will be used for interpretation.

The focus will be on the following areas:

- Climate change and environment
- Terrorism and issues pertaining to security, disarmament and the NPT

Evaluation : 2ST (oral) 35% each + CE 30% in the form of home assignments covering language and note taking exercises and speeches presented in class

End Semester Examination : None

Course Title: Writing Competence
Credits: 2
Course In-charge: Babu Thaliath

Course Contents:

This course aims to improve the ability of students to write texts in German conforming to standards of specific text types. We shall read and discuss texts in class in order to become more aware of particular characteristics of those text types. We will also discuss the epistemological symbiosis between thinking and writing, as represented in a research process. As home assignments, participants will be expected to write around chosen themes on the strength of background research.

There will also be advanced grammar and vocabulary exercises to aid the process of writing.

Evaluation: Class participation, home assignments, and two sessional tests will constitute evaluation for this course. The breakup is as follows:

Class participation: 20%
Homework: 30%
Sessional tests (2): 50%
End-Semester Exam. None

Course Title: Literary Translation II, Winter Semester 2017

Course In-charge: Parnal Chirmuley

Credits: 4

Equipped with an introduction to the conundrums, tools, and methodologies associated with the translation of literary texts in a multilingual context over the Monsoon Semester, participants in this course will now engage more concretely with the politics of translation.

This course attempts to deepen our understanding, as translators of literary texts, of the balance between languages, the extra-textual currents that govern language politics, the questions of identity and translation. The course will be structured around readings addressing political conflict, gender identity, geopolitical location and translation. Discussions will also touch upon the politics of publishing and the attendant challenges before translation in a postcolonial world.

Evaluation:

Three home assignments: 75% (25% each)

Class participation: 25%

Course Title: Theories of Literature IV [Literature and Media]

Course Credits: 04

Course Level: M.A.

Course In-charge: Prof. Sadhana Naithani

Course Contents

This Course will deal with theoretical perspectives concerned with the transformations in literature caused by media, particularly new media. It has been famously argued by Marshall McLuhan that the electronic media are not only transmitting content through a different medium than print, but that the medium itself is transforming the way content will be perceived. Theoretical considerations will depart from traditional discourse of the relationship of (printed) literature with new media, and will introduce literature as it is being created by/with/for the new media. Students are expected to explore, read, hear and see digital literary texts beyond those mentioned in the bibliography below.

Methodologically, this Course will combine texts in print and in audio-visual language, encouraging students to think how the perception of theory transforms through the change of medium. Major theorists will be seen and heard on YouTube, and analytical works on their ideas will be read in print.

Bibliografie/Videografie

www.netzliteratur.net contains several theoretical and literary texts relevant for the course. The site should be thoroughly explored by students and texts of self-selected interest should be read. The following from this website are mandatory reading:

Course Title: Weimar Classicism

Credits: 4

Course-Incharge: Babu Thaliath

Course Contents

Goethes Faust zählt zwar zu den Meisterwerken der Weimarer Klassik, aber die Entstehungsgeschichte dieses Werkes und sein sechzigjähriger Werdegang greifen auf mehrere Epochen über, insbesondere auf die Romantik und auf die europäische Neuzeit im Allgemeinen. Fausts Wissensdrang lässt sich bis auf die Renaissance und die Frühmoderne – also auf eine Zeit, in der sich Europa von der lange vorherrschenden Hegemonie des Mittelalters loslöste – zurückführen.

In dem Kurs wird Goethes Hauptwerk aus verschiedenen historischen, literarischen und kulturellen Blickwinkeln behandelt und analysiert. Dies erfordert eine eingehende Erörterung des zeitsymbolischen Ursprungs der Weimarer Klassik und der Grundzüge Fausts, die das Klassische an diesem Werk ausmachen und weiterhin einen epochalen Übergang von der Klassik in die Romantik suggerieren. Eine charakteristische Symbiose zwischen Goethes Leben und seinem Lebenswerk ist dabei kaum zu übersehen.

Ein ebenso wichtiger Bestandteil des Kurses ist die literaturhistorische und kulturelle Auseinandersetzung (in Bezug auf das späte 19. Jahrhundert) mit der Legitimität dieser Epoche; hier wird u. a. die berühmte Polemik Nietzsches – ob es überhaupt eine Weimarer Klassik gab – im Mittelpunkt stehen.

Course Title: Simultaneous Interpretation - II

Course Credits: 4

Course Level: A

Course-in-Charge: Chitra Harshvardhan

Course Contents: The course seeks to consolidate the varied skills and techniques required for simultaneous interpreting such as split attention, improvisation, shadowing, public speaking, articulation, voice modulation, which were introduced in the previous semester.

Students are expected to read daily and weekly newspapers in both English and German. They are also expected to read articles in academic journals, both print and online. Students would also be expected to present a speech of their own on an aspect of the areas under study, while other students interpret.

The focus will be on the following areas:

- Climate change and environment
- Terrorism and issues pertaining to security, disarmament and NPT

Interpretation will initially be from German into English and later also from English into German. Speeches will be taken from the Internet

Evaluation: 2ST 35% each + CE 30% in the form of home assignments covering language exercises and monthly essays + presentation of a speech written by the student .

End Semester Examination : None

“What is a thing?” – History of a Discourse in German Philosophy of Modernity

Since Descartes, Spinoza and the Philosophy of the Reformation Time we can trace a radical materialization and scientification of the “object”, as well as an objectivation of the subject. Even if the only true thing is awareness of my thinking as a thing – res cogitans – the side conclusion will automatically lead to a structural and perceptual isolation of the object to the extent of what Kant called “The Thing Itself”. The question of perceptibility of a thing that in its degree of objectivation is out of range and in the same time idealized as the truth can be described as the leitmotiv in the German philosophy of modernity, the process of outcoursing and reintegration of truth of what is accessible for human perception and/or understanding. This discourse does not for nothing coincide with the zenith of German Philosophy in the late 18th and early 19th century, with its non-national concept of freedom and its dream of a philosophy based science.

The course will outline an understanding of the history of German philosophy of Modernity along the history of its central discourse. Discussing a selected number of key-texts of Kant, Fichte, Schelling, Hegel, Schopenhauer, Brentano, Nietzsche, Husserl and Heidegger, we will approach the discourse with a pattern of questions outlining the discourse as a “history of thought” / “history of ideas”:

- What is the concept of this philosophy, of itself and its own role in the discourse of sciences?
- What concept of science can be found at all?
- What concept of the thing is implied?
- In what way the Subject-Object-Dualism is discussed and/or treated?
- What does Idealism each mean?
- To what degree is this philosophy a theory of cognition and to what degree a hermeneutical approach?
- How is the relation between perception and understanding designed?

- What concept of truth is involved or bypassed in the discourse?
- What concept of freedom is involved or deviated in the discourse?

Course Title: Editing and Translation II, Winter Semester 2017

Course In-charge: Parnal Chirmuley

Credits: 4

Course Content

In the Monsoon Semester, participants in this course have engaged with issues involved in translating and editing texts of general interest. In this semester, we shall work more closely with genres within fiction and non-fiction. In order to consolidate the ground covered earlier, this course will begin with reading translations of popular children's fiction, and engage with instances of translations in women's writing, particular instances from Indian writing in English, to then go on to translations of academic essays and of monographs in the social sciences. As we analyse translations, we will focus on the modalities of communications across cultures, translators' strategies, and the motivations that govern choices in the publication of translated literatures.
